of a basketball game placated her during the dreaded baby boredom time of 4-7pm. (Moms, you know what I'm talking about.)

March also brings another season – Spring. I'm really more of a winter person. I grew up in the mountains of Virginia and I like cold weather and warm fires. A new snow makes everything look clean and fresh. Spring has its merits, too. I love to watch other people's gardens come alive after a long gray spell. I'm not much of a gardener myself. Spring also reminds me of my dad. His birthday was in April but that's not it. Spring was the time he uncovered the boat for the summer or cleaned up the camper. He waxed cars and dusted off lounge chairs. He pulled off snow tires and knocked around in his woodshop, all the time listening to the local country music station.

I spent a lot of time with Dad while he was doing those things. I can't say I learned how to prepare a boat or a camper and he wouldn't let me use his power tools. But I can say I learned a lot from him. He was a gentle soul who was a good listener and could offer advice without criticism. I learned that it was important to accept folks, warts and all. I learned that helping others when I could was good. Without lecturing me he made sure I understood that the values I learned in church were more important than anything the world would tell me. He was definitely a person who didn't put God in a box only to be opened on Sundays. I'm not sure if Dad intended to give that gift to me. It's just the way he was. And I'm glad to have had him for a teacher.
